It is noteworthy that the melting point of pinene hydrochloride was $132.5\text{--}133.5^\circ\text{C}$. in my experiment (Corr), This is different from the observation made by Wallach who puts the melting point of the same substance at 125°C . (Ann. Chemie, 239, 4) and J. H. Long s report of 131°C . as the melting point (Jour of Amer. Chem. Soc. 21, 637). The third fraction (240-270) gave a slight yellowish liquid of a somewhat visicous nature possessing the wood smell of Hinoki. After the liquid was rectified by distillation over sodium under atmospheric pressure the chief fraction was collected between $260\text{--}270^\circ\text{C}$. The oil thus separated boils mostly between $267\text{--}268^\circ\text{C}$. When the fraction is dissolved in a little glacial acetic acid and is shaken with a few drops of concentrated sulphuric acid, the liquid assumes a faint reddish color which turns to red with a violet tint after a little while. After standing over night, it finally turns to brownish red. The identification of cadinen with this fraction was confirmed by its hydrochloride ($\text{C}_{16}\text{H}_{24} \cdot 2 \text{HCl}$, m. p. $117\text{--}118^\circ\text{C}$.) and hydrobromide ($\text{C}_{16}\text{H}_{24} \cdot 2 \text{HBr}$, m.p. $124\text{--}125^\circ\text{C}$). Again, the rectified oil of the original product was distilled under atmospheric pressure in a flask provided with Le-Bel Henninger s stillhead; the fraction distilling under 170°C . was collected to the amount of 60 a of the original oil; the substance thus collected is colorless and free from empyreumatic odour. The physical properties...
