The dihydrate diversion of Kaleidoscopic: Zhu Guangqian Zong Baihua Comparative Study that Zhu Guangqian and Zong Baihua systematic and comprehensive comparison. we must return to its philosophy based on the fundamental differences between. can be said that all the differences of the two aesthetics are derived from its philosophical foothold discrepancy. The paper attempts to its philosophical roots to the two different stages of development of German idealism. subjective idealism (the subjective or the stage of transcendental idealism) and absolute idealism (the absolute or metaphysical idealism) phase. Zhu Guangqian. the core of the aesthetic image possible conditions. the generation of the image due to the mind or consciousness of a common shared subjective capacity (universally shared subjective capacity or faculty). the so-called intuitive. Through intuition. the mind gives the emotional material. the end result is fun and images to fit the mix of emotional and intuitive form. This sense of the object is constructed process. reflecting the main initiative and creativity (constitutive or formative power of mind). The emphasis of the initiative created by the main a priori. Zhu Guangqian a consistent core spirit and its aesthetics also has a strong subjective features in the methodology is inevitable with a strong methodological solipsism color: from self to enjoy self-reflection. to give a complete image without the combined effects of the 'soul' is 'intuition'. there is no 'art'. from the extreme idealism of Croce's (Barclays-style completely deny the existence of foreign objects empirical idealism. existence is perceived. the existence of things are things of experience. that is something where there are spiritual (mental). non-spiritual...
