Not illustrated. 1817 Excerpt: .society the means of living are always scanty; but if these, somewhat diminished, are, as matter of right, the property of every man, there is an end at once to labour, providence, and virtue among the poor, who are not constrained by a sense of duty. The defaulters, I am persuaded, would embrace the greater portion of mankind; and with how trifling and coarse a subsistence the mere animal part of man will be sustained and multiply, would be incredible to those who have not inquired into the subject. Who, of all the idle and vicious, which such a procedure would encourage, would submit Leon, says the late Mr. Townsend, in his Travels in Spain, destitute of commerce, is supported by the church. Beggars abound in every street, all fed by the convents, and at the Bishop's palace. Here they get their breakfast, there they dine. Besides food at St. Mark's, they receive every to earn his livelihood by the sweat of his brow, if he could obtain bare subsistence only without it? But labour is the appointment of the Deity for good, and it is as effectual to civilize and moralize the human species, as it is to provide the necessaries of life. The mind is employed, its energies are awakened; and thus the physical and intellectual powers assist each other, and conduct it to discoveries the most useful and noble, to arts and sciences, which, while they better his condition, dignify his...
