Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from In the Beginning We developed this production at a time when we had absolutely no funds at all, and morale was at a low ebb. The show was to tour, but there would be no monies for a truck, a stage manager, stage hands, a lighting technician, nor, for that matter, any equipment for them to do anything with. We had only ourselves, six actors, to create the mood, excitement, clarity and focus that set, costumes, and lights might have given us at another time. So our costumes and properties were homemade, out of donated materials, and we borrowed a ladder to give us a level change. And out of this we found some kind of new birth a new way of working and touring as unencumbered as possible. We felt as if it had set us free. Since this play came into being through group improvisation, for the entire first season of touring there was never a written script. We preferred this arrangement because it allowed for the most spontaneous interaction between the actors and vastly different audiences with active roles in the production. Therefore, in solidifying the play into a printed form, we purposely avoided setting every word of dialogue. Instead, in certain sections where the actors must work things out directly with the audience, there is simply a description of the action. The performance area is a room large enough to accomodate about 200 children sitting in a circle on the floor, A territory for each of six groups is indicated by a vividly colored ground cloth: Red, Orange, Yellow, Green, Blue Purple. There is a ladder at either end of the...
