Not illustrated. 1887 Excerpt: .for dinner, ami ihen dug a hole in tho ground us large ft a mass pan between Tyler s thighs, (who wa- sitting on the ground), ana continued on towards the supply train. But the Hag remained, sunning itself. we continued to press at all points, skirmishing in dense forests of timber and across most difficult ravines, until we again found him strongly posted and intrenched, with Kenesaw as his salient, his right wing thrown back to cover Marietta, and his left behind Nose s creek covering his railroad back to the Chattahoochie. This enabled him to contract his lines and strengthen them accordingly. From Kenesaw lie could look down upon our camps and observe every movement, and his batteries thundered away, but did little harm on account of the extreme height, the shot and shell passing harmlessly over our heads as we lay close up against his mountain town. During our operations about Kenesaw the weather was villainously bad, and the rain fell almost continuously for three weeks, rendering our narrow wooded roads mere mud gulleys, so that a general movement would have been impossible; but our men daily worked closer and closer to the entrenched foe, and kept up an incessant picket tiring galling to him. Every opportunity was taken to advance our general lines closer and closer to the enemy. ON PICKET AT KENESAW MOUNTAIN. On the 21st of June, 1864, our pickets were close up to the rebel works; so close that...
